

CHAPTER III. — THE CALENDAR OF THE EGYPTIAN FARMER
Pp. 30-48

- § 1. The Rise and Fall of the A7<v, pp. 30-32. — In Egypt the operations of husbandry dependent on the annual rise and fall of the Nile, 30 iy.; irrigation, sowing, and harvest in Egypt, 30 /.*; events of the agricultural year probably celebrated with religious rites, 32.
- § 2. *AY/t-y of Irrigation pp. 33-40.— Mourning for Osiris at midsummer when the Nile begins to rise, 33 .v</.; simultaneous rise of Sinus, 34; Sinus regarded as the star of Isis, 34 sq.; its rising marked the beginning of the sacred Egyptian year, 35 sy.; importance of the observation of its gradual displacement in the civil calendar, 36 .vy.; ceremonies observed in Egypt and other parts of Africa at the cutting of the dams, 37-40.
- § 3. AY/tv." of Jv??cvXi,; pp. 40-45.—The sowing of the seed in November, 40; Plutarch on the mournful character of the rites of sowing, 40-42; his view that the worship of the fruits of the earth sprang from a verbal misunderstanding, 42 sq.; his theory an inversion of the truth, 43; respect shown by savages for the fruits and animals which they eat, 43 sq.; lamentations at sowing, 45.
- § 4. AY/VV of Harvest, pp. 45-48.—Lamentations of the Egyptian corn-reapers, 45 sq.; similar ceremonies observed by the Cherokee Indians in the cultivation of the corn, 46 sq.; lamentations of Californian Indians at cutting sacred wood, 47 sq.; Arab ceremony of burying "the old man" at harvest, 48.

CHAPTER IV.—THE OFFICIAL FESTIVALS OF
OSIRIS.....Pp. 49-
95

- § i. The Festival at Sais, pp. 49-51.—The Egyptian festivals stationary in the solar year after the adoption of the Alexandrian calendar in 30 B.C., 49 sq.; the sufferings of Osiris displayed as a mystery at Sais, 50; the illumination of the houses on that night suggestive of a Feast of All

Souls, 50 sij.

- § 2. Feasts of All Souls, pp. 51-83.—
Annual festivals of the dead among the natives of America, the East Indies, India, Eastern and Western Asia, and Africa, $1-66; annual festivals of the dead among peoples of the Aryan family, 67 sqq.; annual festival of the dead among the old Iranians, 67 sij.; annual festivals of the dead in Europe, 69-80; transported to the New World, So sq.; the Feast of All Souls on 2nd November apparently an old Celtic festival of the dead, Si sq.; similar origin suggested for the Feast of All Saints on 1st November, 82 sq.